What the Picture Theaters Have to Tell You.

VIRGINIA PEARSON, STAR IN "BLAZING LOVE," BIG WILLIAM FOX FEATURE

Whole life story of a wife with her problems told with a striking moral in this latest film.

The fascinating narrative in "Blazing Love," a master motion picture drama recently released by William Fox is based on a common life problem. Margaret Wain (Virginia Pearson) announces her engagement to Arthur Graham (George Selby), a young explorer, on the eve of his departure on an Arctic trip with Russell Barridan (Frank Goldsmith), an unscrupulous explorer. Six months later Margaret receives word of Graham's death. Upset on by her father, Charles Walsh (Lew Stern), she marries Moran Delafield (Frank Burbeck), a business associate of her father and a man much older than she.

During ten years of uneventful married life Margaret develops into a fashionable woman of society. At one of her receptions Barridan—who in reality was responsible for Graham's death on the Arctic trip, of which he is the only survivor—becomes attracted to Margaret. Angered by her rebuff, he speaks insultingly of her at a gentlemen's club, which is resented by Stephen Bond (William H. Thompson). As a result of the quarrel Barridan is expelled from the club.

Hearing of the incident, Margaret calls at Bond's apartment to thank him for defending her good name. A strong love interest develops between them. Barridan sees Margaret leaving Bond's apartment and taunts her with a threat to tell her husband. A few days later when Bond is calling on Margaret, her husband, Delafield, overhears them. He tells Margaret it is no crime for her to love a younger man but begs her to keep the honor of his name clear, as he has only a short time to live.

Using Barridan's insult to his wife as an excuse, Delafield engineers a quarrel and fight with Barridan, which he purposely makes fatal to himself. A letter tells Margaret of his sacrifice. After a year Margaret and Bond marry. At the end of ten more years she has become a middle-aged woman, although Bond is in the prime of young manhood.

Jeanne Clark (Louise Huff), young and pretty, and a distant relative of Bond's, enlists his aid in a financial matter. The two become fond of one another and without being aware of it fall deeply in love.

Margaret, through a strange chain of events in which a colored servant (Mattie Ferguson) figures, meets Jeanne and invites her to live at the Delafield home, where this strange triangle is brought to a climax by the introduction of a young sailor of Jeanne's hand. Jeanne and Bond acknowledge their love before Margaret and just as Bond and Margaret did years before they decide to separate. Margaret prevents Bond from self-destruction. This decides her. On the anniversary of their wedding she fairly dazzles Bond with her happy brilliancy, appearing to have forgotten looked over the hall, which contained only 300 persons. As the hall was dark, the lights were turned on, giving the barnlike structure a greenish look. Two Kansas delegates were the first to arrive and sat lonesomely among the chairs.

AMERICANISM KEYNOTE.

Countless American flags hung everywhere being wound around the balconies and draped from the ceiling. Old timers said the dispirited air and the dejected appearance of the auditors due to the rain and cold, were almost without parallel.

When the Utah delegation assembled, Smoot said, "We are pulling for the progressives to nominate Roosevelt. An amalgamation is impossible. We will be glad to get rid of the progressive radicals. The other faction will come with us."

Lodge was elected chairman of the republican resolutions committee. Charles Scott of Kansas was elected secretary. Lodge was authorized to appoint a sub-committee of nine to draft a platform. He appointed the following: Horah of Idaho; Sutherland of Utah; Fall of New Mexico; Madden of Illinois; Howland of Ohio; Oliver of Pennsylvania; Wadsworth of New York; Clark of Connecticut.

Public hearings on the platform questions will begin at four this afternoon. Secret sessions will be held tonight.

Lodge said he talked with Roosevelt by telephone, probably at midnight last night. He refused to reveal the time or nature of his talk.

The Snowbird at the Alta.
The Snowbird, a five part wonder-play one of the big special Metro Pictures featuring that charming and talented star, Mabel Taliaferre. There are many beautiful snow scenes in this production and the dog teams that are seen many times throughout the picture are an inspiring sight to our many patrons who are growing tired of the staid old society photodrama. The story is of a young girl who takes herself into the heart of the snow-covered Canadian woods on a visit to her father's partner, who is living on the timber claim owned by them. Her many trials and tribulations hold the spectator spellbound.

Cosy.
Wallace Reid, who is starring with Signa Auer in Opie Reid's great play, "A Yankee from the West," at the Cosy today, was one of the principal characters in "The Birth of a Nation," and with Miss Auer's assistance gives a wonderful picturization of this well known novel by one of America's foremost writers. This four reel mutual masterpicture together with a one reel Tannhäuser comedy, "Freddie's Frigid Finish," completes an attractive bill at the Cosy today.

INCEVILLE JAIL HAS NO ROOF; NO PRISONERS

Among the unique structures at Inceville is a jail. It is different from other jails in that no one is ever kept in it over night, that it has no warden and that no meals are served to prisoners. Furthermore, it has no roof. It is a set, and was constructed only after Producer Thomas H. Ince had figured that gasoline consumed by the autos which took his players to the county jail for scenes was costing more than the erection and maintenance of a building. It was first used in "Civilization's Child," the Triangle-Ince feature in which William H. Thompson and Anna Lehr are co-stars. Miss Lehr had the distinction of being the first woman prisoner. Her term was short, however, for she was confined in one of the cells only long enough to allow Director Giblyn to make two scenes of her behind the bars.

Temple today.

At the Temple.

"The Nature Man" is a film extraordinary. Its six reels are jammed with real, primitive, Martin Eden adventure. Battles hand-to-hand with a bear in a tree—a tremendously thrilling spectacle—strangling the bear to death. He traps a savage, mountain lion and actually kills it before the camera; at one time he has on his hands a snarling, snapping fight with wildcats and panthers; he kills poisonous rattlers and deadly copper-heads in primitive fashion, and meets other wild beasts of the virgin forest in hair-raising fights. Knowles loves to match his brawn and brains against the beasts of the wild, and though his body is covered with scratches and rips from innumerable claws and fangs, Knowles delights in the scars. "When I get mine I take a savage, inexpressible delight in fastening my iron fingers around the throat of the animal that has injured me and slowly strangling it to death."

Temple, Friday and Saturday.

TODAY and TOMORROW ANNA LEHR in Civilization's Child

This latest TRIANGLE PLAY is sure to penetrate right to the heart of every motion picture patron. It's a picture that vividly portrays conditions as they are in the gray city of New York, and is certain to awaken more than a spark of sympathy for the difficulties that beset the paths of the innocent and unwary in this cold city.

You'll enjoy watching the trials and struggles of this little foreigner, and the ending, which is somewhat different than usual, will carry a story you'll not soon forget.
